HISTORY OF WINDON MEMORIAL

One of Northwestern's proud golf traditions is its hosting of The Windon Memorial Golf Classic.

The tourney is named after the late Bernie Windon, former vice-president of Ameritech, who spearheaded the effort to bring major collegiate golf to the Chicagoland area.

The Windon Memorial has been held 21 times since 1993.

The first tournament, known then as the Quintessence Classic, was contested in the fall of 1993 at Kemper Lakes and Royal Melbourne Golf Courses. Kent State won the team title while Stanford's Casey Martin took home individual title honors.

That December, Mr. Windon passed away. Shortly thereafter, the tournament was renamed the Windon Memorial Classic and, to keep Mr. Windon's "quintessential" spirit alive, tournament participants compete for the Quintessence Trophy.

In 1994, Texas A&M and Minnesota were crowned co-champs while Texas A&M's Anthony Rodriguez was the individual champ. In 1995, the Florida Gators won the team title and Florida's Josh McCumber edged Stanford's Tiger Woods by two strokes for the individual crown.

The Windon Memorial Classic was not held in 1996 or 1997 as NU hosted the 1996 Ping/Golfweek Preview and the 1997 NCAA Championships.

The field for the 1998 Windon Memorial Classic featured six teams ranked in the top-25. The Gophers won their second Windon by taking the 1998 crown, holding off NU by three strokes.

The 1999 Windon Memorial Classic was played at Conway Farms Golf Club in Lake Forest, Ill. It again had a stellar field, with five teams ranked in the top 25. NU's Luke Donald was the individual champion, firing a 4-under-par, 209.

The Oklahoma Sooners shot a 4-over-par 868 to win the 2000 Windon Memorial championship at The Knollwood Club in Lake Forest, Ill. Hunter Mahan of USC took home medalist honors as he finished the 54-hole tournament with scores of 72-68-73=213.

In 2002, Northwestern ran away with the Windon championship, defeating second-place Duke by 25 strokes at the Glen View Club in Glenview, Ill. NU shattered the record for lowest winning team score (848) for 54 holes by 20 strokes. The previous record (868) was set by Oklahoma in 2000.

Tom Johnson won in 2002 for his first-collegiate win, shooting a tournament-record final-round 66 on his way to a tournament-record total of 206. Those marks were shattered in 2008 by Indiana's Jorge Campillo's 8-under 63 in the final round and winning total of 8-under 205.

In 2004, the Windon returned to Conway Farms and the Wildcats used a balanced team effort to take their second Windon crown. Purdue's Peter Richardson became the first player in tourney history to capture multiple and consecutive individual titles.

The 10th edition of the Windon Classic, held in 2006 for the first time at the Skokie Country Club, witnessed a new team champion, SMU. SMU's Colt Knost also claimed the individual title, posting a 2-under 211.

NU won its third Windon title in 2007 when it came from behind to top Kent State by a stroke at Lake Shore Country Club.

Illinois captured the 2008 and 2009 Windons held at North Shore Country Club and Skokie Country Club, respectively. A Big Ten team won for the fourth-straight year in 2010 when Michigan's Lion Kim earned medalist honors and sank a 40-foot putt on No. 18 to give the Wolverines a one-shot victory at North Shore.

Arkansas captured the 2011 Windon at Evanston Golf Club while NU's Eric Chun was the runner-up in a field featuring several of the world's top-ranked amateurs.

Competing as an individual, NU's John Callahan won his first-ever college event when he drained a 25-foot putt on his 54th hole of the 2012 edition at Skokie Country Club. As a team, Northwestern finished second, one stroke behind Ohio State after the Buckeyes made a final round charge.

2013 saw the Windon return to Knollwood for the first time since 2000. The 'Cats capture their fourth team title with Jack Perry and Matt Fitzpatrick taking 2-3 for NU behind medalist Chris O'Neill of Michigan.

Tulsa's Colton Staggs shot a final-round 7-under 63 at Evanston Golf Club in 2014 to win medalist honors while tying Luke Donald's 2007 course record. California broke the single-round and tournament team scoring records to win the team title.

In 2015, Purdue ran away with the team crown at Lake Shore CC, shattering the tournament scoring record with a 22-under 830, highlighted by Brian Carlson's 6-under score, which earned him the individual medal. NU finished in third place at 4-under.

The University of Florida paced the 2016 field at North Shore CC, while Michigan's Kyle Mueller won the individual crown. The Wildcats, led by Dylan Wu who tied for second, finished in fourth place.

Northwestern earned its fifth all-time Windon team championship in 2017, carding a five-under total to tie with Penn State atop the team leaderboard. Patrick Flavin from Miami (Ohio) and Brendon Doyle from Indiana were the two individual titlists.
